Dear Erik:

It is hard to believe that it has been almost a year since I first met you, at a meeting at the Capital District Recovery Center. You were so kind to visit with us then, and have continued to be a great friend of the organization. So much has happened since then, of course, and you have patiently stuck by us.

I am writing today to thank you for you and your firm's generous contribution of time, energy and ideas in helping with CDRC's web site design. The new web site is sharp and professional; it is something for all of us at CDRC to aspire to in our other work here.

The web site, of course, is our main face we show to the broad public. With the improvements in design and content, it better reflects who we are and who we hope to become. By welcoming people in via this portal, we are more fully realizing our mission.

We started having groups start meeting in person at CDRC in late June, the first time since the COVID-related shutdown in March. People are gradually coming back for face-to-face meetings and fellowship. It is a slow process, not unlike when we opened for the first time, in July 2018. The new marketing and design on the web site is an essential part of our communication and updates to members of the recovery community, with safety and health guidelines, policies & procedures and other matters.

Again, thank you for your generosity and vision in consulting with CDRC. It has been a pleasure working with you, and we look forward to more interaction.

Sincerely,

William Tuthill
